Clock Tower and Entrance to Sandringham. Here at the end of a pathway of warm red sand rise the red buildings of Sandringham House, which derives its name from the same red soil which runs as far as Wolferton. The house is of brick with dressings of Ketton stone, and the clock tower (which faces the entrance) is also built in the Elizabethan style. The entrance gates of the house are fine modern specimens of ironwork, and were the county's wedding present to King Edward, then Prince of Wales.
